Project Description

The White Marsh Surgery Center is a renovated tenant space located on the second floor of the Johns Hopkins at White Marsh facility. The new center was constructed to help free up the Johns Hopkins Hospital's operating rooms that have been overwhelmed with procedures that can be done on an outpatient basis. Numerous physicians will take advantage of the new center for outpatient procedures. These same procedures that take almost an hour in the hospital setting are now taking less than ten minutes. This new surgical center contains one full-fledged operating room including an electrical isolation panel with emergency generator back-up, audio / visual / recording center, positive pressure environment with HEPA filtration and a full complement of medical gases and EVAC systems. The center also includes two separate procedure rooms for those procedures which would not require the extensive features in the OR.
